This dissertation aims to reconstruct the exhibition of children's games and toys at Dynasy in Warsaw in 1902. An analysis of the organization and course of the exhibition itself was carried out, as well as the characteristics of the toys presented and their functions: educational, socialization and upbringing. The exhibition itself is extremely interesting in the pedagogical and historical context, because it emphasized the educational function of toys and disseminated the knowledge of its importance in the life of a child. It was the first exhibition devoted only to toys and accessories for games in the Polish territories under annexation. The exhibition lasted for over a month, and featured items from factories from various regions of Poland. Equally important were the background of the exhibition, accompanying events for both children and adults, such as shows, concerts and lectures. The source material used in writing of this paper includes written sources: press (daily, pedagogical, family, socio-literary, children's), reports on meetings and activities of associations related to the organization of the exhibition, catalogs and posters, pedagogical, educational and hygienic guides, price lists; unwritten iconographic sources: illustrations, publishing labels and prints. The collected information was subjected to historical and pedagogical analysis.
